1 MARY THE JEWESS
by Robin Damore

Also known as Maria the Jewess and Maria Prophetissima, Mary lived between the first and third centuries and is considered to be the first true alchemist of the Western world. Alchemy was the precursor of modern chemistry, and Mary is credited with the invention of several kinds of chemical apparatus including the bain-marie (Mary's bath), used in chemical processes and cooking when a gentle heat is needed.

2 FRIAR JOHN COR
by Sean Cain

'Deliver eight bolls of malt to Friar John Cor wherewith to make aqua vitae'

With this excerpt from The Accounts of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland in 1494, John Cor, a Benedictine monk at Lindores Abbey in Fife entered into Scotch history with the first recorded reference to a distilled spirit in Scotland. A 'boll' is an old Scottish measure of around six bushels of grain, and eight of them would make around fifty gallons of aqua vitae, Latin for the water of life.

3 JOHN JAMESON
by Sean Cain

John Jameson was a Scot who married a daughter of John Haig, patriarch of a family dynasty that dominated Lowland Scotch whisky in the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. Jameson founded the John Jameson and Son Company in 1780 and the Bow Street Distillery in Dublin, the second city of the British Empire. Jameson's distillery, producing pure pot still Irish whiskey, would become the largest distillery in the British Isles by the end of the nineteenth century.

4 GEORGE WASHINGTON
by Ken Sellen

George Washington, the greatest of all Virginians, was Commander-in-chief of the Continental Army, Founding Father and the first President of the United States. He built the George Washington Distillery on his Mount Vernon estate in Fairfax County, Virginia in 1797. By 1799, the commercial distillery produced 11,000 gallons of rye and corn-based whiskey, yielding a handsome profit of $7,500. The mashbill for Washington's rye whiskey was 60% rye, 35% corn and 5% barley.

5 ABRAHAM OVERHOLT
by Ryan Berkely

Abraham Overholt began commercial distilling around 1810 on the family farm in western Pennsylvania. The popularity of his “Old Farm” whiskey resulted in the building of a much larger, modern distillery nearby at Broad Ford on the Youghiogheny River. The A. Overholt Distilling Company produced a brand called Old Monongahela, named for the style of rye whiskey (80% or more rye in the mashbill, and malted barley) made in the western counties of Pennsylvania.

6 GEORGE SMITH

George Smith began making illicit whisky in 1817 on his farm in Glenlivet, a remote Speyside district notorious for smuggling and fine whisky. Smith’s Glenlivet established a reputation for quality with the Edinburgh gentry and when the 1823 Excise Act, sponsored by Smith’s landlord, made legal distillation practical, Smith was the first distiller to take out a license under the new Act. Smith’s Glenlivet would become the most famous legal malt whisky in Scotland.

7 AENEAS COFFEY
by Ken Sellen

The former Inspector General of the Excise in Ireland and owner of the Dock distillery in Dublin, Coffey invented the patent or Coffey still in 1830. His still, a greatly improved version of an earlier design by the Scotsman, Robert Stein, allowed for the continuous distillation of inexpensive whisky –the base ingredient for blended Scotch. Scotland’s Lowland whisky distillers embraced the Coffey still and laid the foundation for the international success of blended Scotch whisky.

8 ALEXANDER WALKER
by Robin Damore

In 1820, John Walker, the son of Ayrshire farmers, set up an ‘Italian warehouse’ as a grocer, wine and spirit merchant in the town of Kilmarnock, Ayrshire. The original business was small and strictly local until John’s son, Alexander, joined the company. Alexander created ‘Walker’s Old Highland Whisky’, a robust, Victorian dram that would evolve in the 1870’s into Johnnie Walker Black Label with the familiar square bottle and slanted gold and black label.

9 JAMES GRANT
by Sean Cain

Nineteenth century innovator and world traveler, James Grant, (The Major), lived by his own rules and exotic standards. The Speyside distillery he founded, Glen Grant, is located in the hardworking town of Rothes and was the first distillery to have electric light. Grant introduced the tall, slender stills and purifiers to create the smooth, fruity flavor that defines Glen Grant whisky to this day.

10 PHYLLOXERA BEETLE
by Ken Sellen

Meet the louse that devastated the grape producing wine regions of France in the 1880's, decimated their brandy industry and thus opened the high road for canny Scottish entrepreneurs including Tommy Dewar, James Buchanan and Alexander Walker. Blended Scotch whisky, mixed with soda water, went on to dominate the spirits world.

11 JACK DANIEL
by Robin Damore

Jasper Newton (Jack) Daniel, inherited his first distillery at the age of fourteen. His eponymous distillery at the Cave Spring Hollow in Lynchburg (pop. 361), Tennessee, was the first to be registered in the United States. In 1905, unable to open the combination, Mr. Jack kicked his office safe and gangrene set in. He died six years after the fateful kick.

12 JAMES E. PEPPER
by Stephen O'Donnell

Son of Oscar Pepper and a member of one of Kentucky's most important whiskey families, James E. Pepper took over the Old Oscar Pepper Distillery in Lexington, KY in 1867. Reputed to have taken the Old-Fashioned cocktail, his favorite tippie at Louisville's Pendennis Club, and introduced it to the citizens of New York when he moved there in 1870.

13 JULIAN "PAPPY" VAN WINKLE
by Sean Cain

Born in Danville, KY, "Pappy" Van Winkle was one of the whiskey industry's most colorful characters. He joined W.L. Weller and Son as a salesman and was so good at his job that he sold whiskey to moonshiners. In 1908 Van Winkle took a controlling interest in W.L. Weller and Son, eventually merging it with the Stitzel Company and opened the Stitzel-Weller Distillery on Derby Day, 1935. Pappy preferred to drink wheated Bourbon at least 10 years old.

14 COLONEL EDMUND HAYNES TAYLOR JR.
by Sean Cain

E.H. Taylor, a great nephew of President Zachary Taylor, was a major figure in shaping the modern Bourbon industry. Owner of the Old Fashioned Copper (OFC) Distillery (now Buffalo Trace) in Frankfort, Ky, Taylor modernized the distillery and worked to establish the Bottled-in-Bond Act of 1887, which protected and guaranteed the integrity of straight Bourbon.

15 SHINJIRO TORII
by Ken Sellen

Regarded as the Father of Japanese whisky, Shinjiro Torii founded the Kotobukiya Company which would become the Suntory Company in 1899. He built Yamazaki, Japan's first commercial distillery, in 1923. Located on the outskirts of Kyoto, the exceptionally pure water in the Vale of Yamazaki was used historically in Japan's esteemed tea ceremonies. Torii was aided by Masataka Taketsuru, who founded the Nikka Company, Japan's other great whisky distilling house.

16 MICHAEL JACKSON
by Ken Sellen

Yorkshire born, the cerebral Jackson was the author of influential books about whisky and beer, introducing consumers through writing and travel to the mysteries of single malt whisky and craft beer. Jackson passed away in 2007, but his legacy lives on in such classic guides as Michael Jackson's Malt Whisky Companion, and in breweries and distilleries around the world.

The Multnomah Whisk(e)y Library holds a unique collection of custom portraits that line the west wall of the Library. Whilst you sip your drink, learn more about these fine works of art and history.

JIM MCEWAN
by Robin Damore

Islay born and bred, McEwan began sweeping the floors at Bowmore Distillery and went on to become master distiller and one of the great whisky ambassadors for Islay and Scotch whisky. He moved (some say he walked) across the water of Lochindaal to Bruichladdich Distillery after 38 years at Bowmore, and established 'the old lady' as one of Scotland's most innovative and eclectic distilleries.
